Chapter 1 by Aaron Lara

I would really want to tell you the best story of the world, but that story is not meant to be told or written, because those who has heard it or read it are dead now.

I don't know what the best story of the world is about or how it began, I don't even know how it can be "The best story of the world" if nobody who knows it is alive to rate it.

So this is not the best story of the world, but a story who talks about how the best story of the world ruined my life...

Chapter 2 by crimson   ✎

It all began when I first met Terry, a nice guy with a lot of tattoos and piercings - he kinda looks scary but he's the opposite. He was in the same class with me, sitting next to me when I looked over to his notebook. The page was filled with words, and I couldn't really understand what the words meant, the language was probably a different one, I couldn't tell.
Terry noticed that I've been staring at his notebook and quickly closed it.

"Well that doesn't mean you can't try me!" I stated, crossing my arms.

Terry just sighed and shook his head, obviously conflicted about something he was thinking about.

"Come on! Pretty please?" I begged, and then I did the one move that absolutely, positively no one can turn down.

I did the puppy eyes.

Terry just sighed again, but he seemed to have made up his mind about whatever he was thinking about. I just hope that he had decided to tell me what the language was.

"I'll tell you, if you can give me a good reason to." he smirked, thinking that he had already won the battle.

Sadly, I was on debate team. And I was basically a 3 year old.

He was so going down.
